MISCELLANY.

PAGANINI.

London, July—, 1834.—The disposition of the critics on the fine arts to deal in vague and extravagant descriptions, has never been more abundantly manifested, than in the marvellous accounts of the performance of Paganini on the violin. According to these wonder making gentlemen, the whole affair of his fiddle playing is a very supernatural sort of business. They say that he sets his auditors laughing or crying, just as he pleases; that he initiates at will, half a dozen other instruments; that he draws forth tones, wholly unlike all other sounds; and most wonderfully confounding all known laws of acoustics; that he sometimes produces on one string more acute tones by moving the hand towards the nut, and graver ones, by shifting it towards the bridge; that is, on the same string, remaining at the same degree of tension, that he makes more acute sounds by lengthening, and graver ones by shortening the vibrating portion of the string.

Certainly his playing is most admirable; but the only wonderful things about it, are the facts, that thousands of gaping listeners have been persuaded to believe in the ridiculous nonsense which has been published of him; and that he has thus made a vast deal more money out of the English aristocracy, than if he had possessed knowledge and taste in music, sufficient to appreciate those excellencies which make him perhaps, the finest violinist in the world.

He comes out in front of every object on the stage to face the audience, without music, or music stand about him; two things not in the least needed by a man who always plays his own compositions, which have generally been studied for years. I was very much struck with his manner of holding the instrument, and with his attitude; both of which were singularly good, instead of being at all grotesque or awkward, according to the critics. The left elbow was thrown well forward upon his chest, the neck of the violin inclining so far to the left as to allow the most unrestrained motion of the bow arm, which he threw about as freely as if a riding switch had been in his hand, in place of a violin bow.

As to his playing, it is really so delightful, that after hearing him, one can readily believe him to be the first performer that has ever touched the instrument. But there is not the slightest mystery as to the manner in which he produces his effects. He does not use one single power of the instrument which has not been heard in every civilized country. The difference between other violinists and himself, lies in the fact, that they have various degrees of command over some of the powers of the instrument, and a boggling execution in others; whereas he has perfect command of all. Whatever can be done on the violin, he can do, and with the easiest and most finished execution, guided in him by a cultivated and extremely finished taste.

His fingering is rapid and easy to the greatest possible degree, and always with surety and a perfectly true intonation; especially towards the bridge, which he sometimes appears, almost to touch. There is, apparently, no difference in the facility with which he fingers the chromatic and diatonic scales, whether in successions of single or double notes. For example, he played a run of chromatic thirds with great rapidity, and swelled the passage. This was executed beyond doubt, by fixing the position of two fingers for the chord, and then moving the hand through the half tone intervals by nervous skips, as passages are often played in the key of C, on the Piano.

One of the things which seemed to excite the liveliest admiration, in the fashionable portion of the audience, was a pretty long passage, in which were heard alternately, one tone produced by the bow, and another by plucking the string with a finger of the left hand.—Many fiddlers in Italy and Spain do this sort of imitation of the dry guitar and violin answering each other; but doubtless they do not execute it with as much rapidity and elegance as Paganini. It is to my taste, very little better than a trick; and I am sure that, even as it is performed by him, one would soon become tired of it.

Of his bowing I can say with an admiring Musician that it is glorious. And by the way, I cannot help adding that I like the glory of a fiddle bow a great deal better than the sword's glory; which has not only covered the world with human blood, and filled it with misery in all ages; but it has entailed upon man nearly all the political and social evils under which he now suffers. But to Signore Paganini. Nothing can exceed the clearness and liquid smoothness of the tones of his violin from the flowing bow; the volume of sound perpetually swelling and diminishing. This flowing bow, as it is called, or the drawing of the bow down or up while the fingers change upon the string, is the simplest action in the art of playing; but it is by it that the great est performers produce the very highest and most delightful effects of the violin. It is through the management by the bow of the different degrees of intensity and volume of tone, to use the language of musicians, that the soul of a passage is expressed. And it is in this, more than any thing else, that Paganini's true excellence lies.

In his staccato passages, no grating is heard; they are almost as clear and smooth as his slurred ones.—There is a very slight staccato not produced by detaching the bow from the strings, but by a kind of nervous jerking or succession of distinct impulses, which is by fiddling generally, in a manner that excites a very lively torment. Paganini makes it definite, smooth and really beautiful. But he employs every degree of staccato, from this to that produced by almost throwing the bow at the strings. He seldom resorts, however, to such rough touching of the strings, except to make one loud tone, as a mark amidst the din of the orchestra; although when he did so, at the concert I attended, the audience seemed to admire hugely this violent contrast of bow and fiddle.

The concrete slide, (running the finger up or down the strings while the bow keeps up their vibration,) is occasionally used, through short intervals, by all violinists, but Paganini carries it through long intervals, and repeats it so as absolutely to make passages out of it. Sometimes he employs it on two strings, fingered in thirds—but I am not certain that it is agreeable, even with the help thus of chords. One thing, however, is very certain—that it is the very easiest thing ever done upon the violin.

The perfection with which he produces and manages the harmonic tones, is one of the great excellencies of his playing. These tones of his violin are always, even when made nearer the bridge, decided, strong, and of course, liquid as it is possible to make sounds.

It would be farcical to attempt giving his style a place in the common classification of styles; for his combines the distinguishing parts of most others. He is marked, much to my pleasure and surprise, very little with oddities; indeed one having any knowledge of music, must be chiefly impressed by his perfect execution, and the manifestation of the most refined, at the same time unconfined taste. As a strong proof of the elevation of his taste, he seldom resorts to a shake, although he could eclipse every one else in it—and, in England, nothing in music can properly be said to be adored—except a shake.

Paganini is said to have considerable learning in music, which I suppose is true; as he always plays his own compositions, and arranges the orchestral parts himself. The pieces I heard him play were not remarkable, however, for their originality or great beauty, still I never received half so much pleasure from any other violin.

He is now between fifty and sixty years old; rather tall and thin, erect in his carriage, dresses in black, has a dark skin, a large face, a big nose, and long black hair, carelessly worn over his ears. Indeed he is a very common decent kind of man in his appearance, notwithstanding his figure and countenance have come in for their share of the mysterious—the critics representing him to be quite an unearthly looking old fellow.—When I saw him, instead of having any thing unearthly in his countenance, or of appearing to despise his crowded audience, he seemed extremely gratified with their numbers, and tickled with the applause bestowed upon him; smiling with a very good grace, and making many very creditable bows. At all events, his good looks, his agreeable ways, his big nose, or his fine playing, or all together, captivated the heart of a beautiful young singer in London; who lately ran away to meet him in France, and be wedded; when her father managed to arrive before her at the rendezvous, and bring her weeping back to England. It is said that this event will make her fortune on the English stage. What a lucky girl! and what a happy country to be in such a moral condition!

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1834.

The cue of the Bank force is very happily given in the following extract from an able article in the Baltimore Republican, entitled "Incendiary Harangues." "If any canting, hypocritical patriots hereafter undertake to play such a farce again, we think they will, in all probability, be hissed from the stage. (In the language of Ben Johnson,) 'Son John, son Clay, this is a thing as is once done, is never done again.'"

"Every day during this season of panic-making, gave birth in the Senate to a phillippic from some of the Bank orators, calling down the vengeance of the people upon the Chief Magistrate. Almost every hour, then, in one House or the other, he was inveighed against as a tyrant, an usurper, a despot—and Tiberius, Nero, Caligula, Cromwell, and all their sins were laid at his door, and the fate they deserved, invoked for him. But these Bank orators did not confine their exhortations to the theatre of the Senate and House. Messrs Webster, Preston, Poindeux, Binney, McDuffie, sallied forth during the session, to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, making appeals to party fury, to excite inflamed multitudes, goaded by the oppressions inflicted by the invisible hand of the corporation conclave, to some demonstration of violence against the Government. Then it was that the Bank presses gave it out, that the President would not have been safe if the seat of Government were in one of the great cities, to have taken his stand. That is, he could not have dared to maintain the rights of the Government of the people, over the money of the people, in derogation of the Bank's right to retain it and abuse it, to the purpose of extending its power over the State Banks, and to apply the increased power it conferred, to the corrupt purpose of creating electioneering funds out of its profits. Then it was that Messrs Binney and Webster made their Sunday phillippics to a mob at Baltimore. Then it was attempted to shake the purpose of some in the House of Representatives in regard to the vote on the deposit question, by getting up what was called a Whig Military Association at Baltimore, preparatory to marching and encamping on Capitol Hill until the vote was taken. Then it was that the President was threatened by every mail by letters admonishing him, that assassination awaited his perseverance in his course against the Bank.

These were the overt acts of a conspiracy regularly organized by agents and attorneys notoriously in the pay of the Bank, and yet more eagerly instigated by the political power which it was hoped would crown the triumph of the corporation over the administration."

A Federal bug-bear raised.—The federal papers have of late been extremely busy in circulating an "Extraordinary Exposure," in which it is charged that Mr Plummer, M. C., from Mississippi, had been guilty of a gross abuse of his franking privilege, by furnishing Charles Robinson, Esq., of Vermont, with "forty sheets of blank letter paper, bearing his frank!"—which paper was found in Mr R.'s trunk after his death by cholera, in Ohio. Mr Plummer has explained the matter, by stating that Mr Robinson was employed by him during the session of Congress, to attend and respond to such business communications as he received from his constituents, particularly those relating to pensions; that, for this purpose, he was furnished with a quantity of blank sheets bearing Mr P's frank. Mr P. positively states that he never franked any political letter addressed to Mr Robinson, by any one—that he never furnished Mr R. with any blank franks, to be used at any other place than Washington City, nor for any illegal purpose—and that he never franked any letters written by Mr Robinson, unless such letters were written by his (Mr Plummer's) order or request, or on the business of his office. Widely and industriously as this charge has been circulated, it is not to be expected that the federal papers will have honor or magnanimity enough to notice the refutation.

The Richmond Whig charges the Hon. LEVI WOODBURY with federalism. No charge could be more utterly groundless. The Dover Gazette says the first known political act of Mr Woodbury's, after he became of age, was the drawing up of a series of spirited resolutions, in support of the war, which were adopted at a Convention in the county of Cheshire, (N. H.) in 1812. The Federalists will never forgive him for that act; and so great is their enmity towards him, that they would even curse him by endeavoring to attach to him the odium of their own principles. This is too bad. Let them do what else they please, but not attempt to identify this favorite of the Democracy of New England, with political tenets to which he has always been strenuously opposed.

Good bye, we are done with you, Messrs. New York Editors—you are too cross and surly for our acquaintance. What in the deuce makes you so crabbed with each other? The Star quarrels with the Times—the Times with the Star—the Post calls the Star all sorts of ugly names—the Star backguards the Post—the Transcript bites its thumb at the Sun, and the Sun calls the Transcript a "liar"—one affirms that the cholera exists in New York, and gives the names of individuals who have died with it, while his neighbor as positively asserts that no such disease is there, and that he has just concluded a conversation with a man who was declared to be dead. The Times says Miss Phillips is the pink of perfection, which opinion the Transcript pronounces "injurious and erroneous," and says that her balcony scene in Juliet was a complete failure, and concludes by intimating that Dr. Holland is too much in love to criticise impartially, and that Maj. Noah is too good natured to tell the truth. All this hubbub goes to prove that "Doctors never can agree," and the cause of the present trouble is, that so many of them should happen at the same moment to be in the Editorial ranks—there is Dr. Holland of the Times, [the cleverest among 'em]—Dr. Green of the Transcript—Dr. Hart of the Courier, and Doctors Incog about the papers all over the city. "Throw physic to the dogs."

Great Reaction.—Mr DUNLAP, the Democratic candidate for Governor of Maine, has been re-elected to that office by nearly double the majority by which he was chosen the previous year.

Ryan, the successor of Gallagher, has opened the Howard-street House—his arrangements for the accommodation of the public appear to be every way adequate to the purposes for which they are intended, while his obliging disposition can scarcely fail to win for him a popularity not less than that possessed by his esteemed predecessor.

Mr Mill's balloon ascension in Philadelphia, on Monday, was completely successful. The Pennsylvaniaian says—"Altogether, it was the most beautiful ascension ever witnessed in this vicinity."

POLICE COURT.

"Tis the great art of life to manage well
The restless mind.
Quite unemployed, against its own repose
It turns its fatal edge, and sharper prays
Than what the body knows embitter life."

A touching and instructive, albeit not a very elegant illustration of the truth of the above quotation, was presented in the poverty-stricken person of Mr Michael Grant, who marched into Court, with a dashing military air, to which a huge pair of red whiskers and redder mustaches, contributed considerably. As he had a bright dare-devil eye, combined with an erect, cut-and-slash bearing, it was at first supposed that he meditated some bold ruse de guerre upon the Court and Clerk, upon the score of some old grievances, which he might have experienced from their hands in the discharge of their official duties, especially as he was recognized as a runaway house of correctionist. The alarm and tremor occasioned by his precipitate and unceremonious entrance speedily subsided, however, when he was perceived to approach one of the officers, and whisper mysteriously in his ear. "Some robbery!—He wants a warrant!"—were then the pass-words that circulated among the "outs" of the secret. And a warrant, in truth, he did want—against himself, as a poor forlorn wretch, without a friend or home—

"A hope-banished wight,
Unfitted with an aim."

The officer listened to his tale of intolerable misery, and kindly consented to assist him, by charitably, and, indeed, conscientiously swearing "that he was a most incorrigible vagabond, wandering from place to place, neglecting all lawful calling." After the officer had done his best to oblige him, Grant addressed the Court, in the following sensible and philosophic speech:—

"May it please your honor, it may seem a little singular for me to say so,—but the fact is, I am troubled in mind; and you know a man's happiness is in his mind. If the mind's all right and in order, the wheels of life move slick; but when the mind is troubled, the whole man is in confusion—and my mind is always foul when I have no employment—and as I can get none, I am therefore miserable. A metrical moralist beautifully says—

"Some minds are tempered happily, and mixed
With such ingredients of good sense, and taste,
That no restraints can circumscribe them more
Than they themselves by choice, for wisdom's sake.
Nor can example hurt them."

But it is not my happy lot to be blessed with an intellect of such a high order, and I shall therefore be everlastingly thankful to your honor if you will send me to a place where I shall be obliged to work—where I can forget myself in some honorable occupation, and where I can be useful to the world. As I can easily escape from the House of Correction, perhaps you can send me to the State Prison, where they keep a sharper look out, and where the discipline appears to be in a high state of preservation. I shall there find employment to occupy my thoughts, and shall become something more than a cypher on the scroll of existence. By such a disposition of me your gracious honor will, to use the language of the divine Macbeth,

"minister to a mind diseased;
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow;
Raze out the written troubles of the brain;
And with some sweet oblivious antidote,
Cleanse the stuffed bosom of that perilous stuff,
Which weighs upon the heart."

Court.—It is very fortunate for you that there is a complete case made out against you; and as you are so very candid and well-disposed, I shall do the best I can for you, by sentencing you to the House of Correction for six months—the longest period for which I can accommodate you; but unless you improve this opportunity, so desired by you, the next time you are brought here I shall not do anything more for you, but let you shift for yourself.

This week, at East Sudbury, a singular instance of death, from a trifling cause occurred. Mr Benjamin Savin, of that place, stumbled, and in the fall slightly wounded his under lip with his teeth, at seven o'clock in the evening of Sunday, 10th inst., from which time he continued to bleed, notwithstanding the best medical aid, until his death, which took place at six o'clock of the morning of the following Tuesday.—Brigg's Bulletin.

The Concert at Boylston Hall this evening promises to afford a good entertainment, and we hope will be well attended. Mr Walton deserves something from the liberality of the public, on account of the injury his interests have sustained in gratifying its will toward another on a previous occasion; nor are the claims of Messrs Comer and Williamson less than Mr W's, for they have long contributed much to the amusement of this community, and deserve a strong token of approbation at his hands.

The Maroncelli Concerts have been very well and fashionably attended; the last one at Masonic Temple highly spoken of. The sympathy felt for the misfortunes of the patriotic Maroncelli has excited a strong and general desire for his success—many of our most respectable citizens have exhibited a very laudable zeal in his behalf.

Paganini.—Miss Watson, the pupil of this great fiddler, having excited some attention in New York, and being expected here, we have placed upon our First Page a letter from London, which lately appeared in the U. S. Gazette, relative to her master. It gives a very interesting description of his most high Fiddle-ship.

Ugolino is the title of a tragedy written by Booth, the actor. It was performed at the Bowery on Wednesday night, and is said to abound in dramatic situations and beautiful poetry.

Panini's Painting of Ancient and Modern Rome, and Cole's Picture of the Angel appearing to the Shepherds, now on exhibition in Pearl street, should be seen by every one who has taste for the arts.

Miss Duff, who was attached to the Tremont Theatre last season, is playing at Pittsburgh. She was to appear as Lady Macbeth on the 13th inst.

Notice.—Those gentlemen who have not paid their bets made upon the elections in Maine, will please call at the Capin's office and pay they.

The Worcester Rail Road Cars to-day will go as far as Hopkinton.

Gold! Gold!—The gold coinage, which the Bank presses, and especially the New York Star, and its button brother of the Commercial, are trying to discredit, continues with great activity. The demand for it has greatly increased, rather than diminished, as the opposition organs have wantonly alleged.

On this point, we are happy to lay before the people an extract from the last week's official report, which we have obtained at the Treasury Department:

Statement of the amount of Gold remaining in the Mint, uncoined, the 6th September, 1834, with the amount deposited for coinage within the week ending September 13, together with the amount of Gold Coinage executed, and of coins delivered within the same period:

Remaining uncoined at the Mint, 6th Sept.	$651,000
Deposited for coinage during the week ending the 13th September, viz:
Uncoined bullion,	$120,000
Coins of the United States of former standard,	4,000
Foreign Coins,	208,000
	332,000
	983,000

Amount coined during the week ending 13th September, 180,000

Remaining uncoined, $803,000

The Gold Mines of the United States.—What were considered the dreams of visionaries, stimulated by grasping cupidity, at the early discovery of the North American continent, turn out to be true predictions.—In all the old charters, and in the first, especially, of "The North and South Virginia Companies," comprehending the entire American continent, from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans, these truly magnificent grants to the then bold adventurers under Raleigh, Cabot, So-to, &c., and which were looked upon in pretty much the same light as the promises of Don Quixote to Sancho Panza, the James' and the Charles', on the thrones of England, always cautiously and scrupulously reserved to themselves the profits that might arise from any mines of gold, silver or other precious metals. Time has shown these conjectures on the embowelled wealth of our country have proved true; and that had we continued in colonial dependence, our mines would have become a lucrative source of revenue to their royal personages. It is estimated, we believe, in the transactions of the Geological Society of Pennsylvania, that since the commencement of the working of the gold mines, that run in a mineral belt, it may be said, parallel to the course of Blue Ridge, from Georgia to Maryland, there has been obtained gold to the amount of no less than six millions of dollars. The mines are generally in talcose slate, gneiss, &c. scattered superficially in the gavelly beds of small streams, and therefore easily worked.—Three deposit mines alone in Georgia, have yielded half a million dollars. Those of North Carolina generally furnish a million of bullion annually to the mint.—But little, however, of the great proportion gets into circulation. Most of it is worked up into jewelry, or exported.—N. Y. Star.

The New York American, speaking of the recent arrests for mail depredations, of the Postmaster and Assistant Postmaster at Wythe Court House, Virginia, says—

"The Globe does not mention whether these were Jackson appointments."

Thus implying that if a felony were committed, the head of the administration, from which the appointments issued, would be responsible. We have made inquiry, for the satisfaction of the New York American, and are enabled to inform him, that the Postmaster in question was appointed under the administration of John Quincy Adams, on the 25th of May, 1827, and that the Assistant was appointed by his principal, according to usage. The editor of the American will please make the most favorable implication, consistent with his charitable feelings.—Globe.

Affecting incident at Mr Boyd's Murder.—When the Spanish mercenaries had murdered poor Boyd and his companions, the populace darted out on the yet breathing victims to strip them of their clothes, and wreck their barbarous vengeance on their remains. The son of Mr Mark, at Malaga, happened to be passing by at the very moment; he sprang from the carriage in which he was, snatched up a remnant of an British flag, which, by a remarkable destiny, was on the ground, and having thrown it over his dying countryman, stood between him and the rushing mob, and exclaimed—"This is the British flag; touch what is beneath its protection at your peril." The populace were awe-struck, and the body was conveyed in silence to the carriage, and Mr Mark drove away.

Consolation in being robbed.—On Monday night, at the Park theatre, a gentleman came up to the officer and showed him his pocket, which had been cut, and from which his pocket book, containing from 30 to 40 dollars, had been withdrawn by some dexterous thief. He expressed great joy at the event, and seemed delighted. The officer looked with amazement, and thought the man crazy; but the sequel proved how much he had to congratulate himself upon. On being questioned by the officer, he stated that previous to coming to the theatre, by the merest chance, he took out of his pocket book $2200, the whole of his worldly wealth, which had he lost would have reduced him to poverty and despair, and must have forced him to madness and death.—N. Y. Star.

Captain Latham, of the ship Washington Irving from Cadiz, (August 13) informs us that when he left all was tranquil. It was not known whether Don Carlos was in Spain or not; it was rumoured he was in Spain.—Captain Latham also states that when he left the cholera was raging to a great extent in Madrid.—Ibid.

Health of Charleston.—The Board of Health of Charleston have given notice that the city is afflicted with the "stranger's fever." In the week ending on the 7th of fourteen deaths, seven were occasioned by this disease. There were but two deaths of coloured persons in the whole number.—Ibid.

The number of deaths occasioned by cholera in this city, since its ravages commenced this summer, to the present time, embracing yesterday's final report of the Board of Health, is 636. This is the total of the daily reports: the number of deaths by cholera during the same period, as shown by adding together the weekly statements of the City Inspector, is 734. In 1832, during a corresponding period, the number of deaths by cholera was 3513—nearly five times as many as those of the present season. This presents a view of the subject which ought to excite the most grateful feelings.—N. Y. Post.

The rattlesnake trade from America to England begins to be prosecuted with considerable vigor—the consignments being labelled, "good merchantable rattlesnakes." There are already one hundred of them exhibiting in the Tower of London, and John Bull expresses apprehensions that this new Yankee species of merchandise may in time become domiciliated in England.—N. Y. Sun.

Great Freshet in the Roanoke.—We regret to learn, that a freshet of unprecedented height has caused great destruction of the crops in the lowlands of Roanoke from Alexander's ferry to Blakely, the lowest point from which we have heard. At Weldon the water is said to have been 6 1-2 feet higher than ever was before known.—Petersburg (Va.) Constellation.

The earliest American writer of whom we have any information was Peter Bulkley, who was born in 1583 and died in 1659 in Massachusetts, and wrote Latin poetry and Sermons. The earliest poetic volume written in this country, was by Anne Broadstreet, of Boston, born 1612, died 1672.

Astonishing Curiosity.—On the evening of the 13th inst. a gentleman in this village found in his wine cellar a live striped snake, nine inches long, suspended between two shelves by the tail, by a spider's web. The snake hung so that his head could not reach the shelf below him, by about an inch; and several huge spiders were then upon him, sucking his juices. The shelves were about two feet apart; and the lower one was just below the bottom of a cellar window, through which the snake probably passed into it. From the shelf above, there was a web in the shape of an inverted cone, eight or ten inches in diameter at the top, and concentrated to a focus about six or eight inches from the under side of this shelf. From this focus there was a strong cord made of the multiplied threads of the spider's web, apparently as large as common sewing silk, and by this cord the snake was suspended. Upon a close examination through a magnifying glass, the following curious facts appeared. The mouth of the snake was fast tied up, by a great number of threads wound around it, so tight that he could not run out his tongue. His tail was tied in a knot, so as to leave a small loop or ring, through which the cord was fastened; and the end of the tail, above this loop, to the length of something over half an inch, was lashed fast to the cord, to keep it from slipping. As the snake hung, the length of the cord, from his tail to the focus to which it was fastened, was about six inches; and a little above the tail, there was observed a round ball, about the size of a pea.

Upon inspection, this appeared to be a green fly, around which the cord had been wound, as the windlass, with which the snake had been hauled up; and a great number of threads had been fastened to the cords above, and to the rolling side of the ball, to keep it from unwinding and letting the snake down. The cord, therefore, must have extended from the focus of the web to the shelf below, where the snake was lying when first captured; and being made fast to the loop in his tail, the fly was carried and fastened about midway to the side of the cord. And then, by rolling this fly over and over, it wound the cord around it, both from above and below, until the snake was raised to the proper height, and then it was fastened, as before mentioned. In this situation the poor snake hung, alive, and furnished a constant feast for several large spiders, until Saturday forenoon, the 16th, when some persons, by playing with him, broke the web, above the focus, so as to let part of his body rest upon the shelf below. In this situation he lingered, the spiders taking no notice of him, until Thursday last, eight days after he was discovered, when some large ants were found devouring his dead body.—Batavia Times.

Keeping a Cloak Dry.—A countryman was seen the other day, in the midst of a smart shower, sitting on the steps of a house in Nassau street, with his cloak nicely folded up and placed under him.

"Come in, my friend," said the occupant of the house—"don't sit there in the rain—you'll get wet to the skin."

"Thank you, sir," said the stranger "thank you kindly. But I've got a good thick cloak under me."

"Under you!—why, you're crazy, man. If you won't come in, you'd better put it over you."

"Oh, no, sir; it's a bran new cloak, and I want to keep it dry."—N. Y. Trans.

Order.—A Quaker, named Benjamin Lay, (who was a little cracked in the head, though sound at heart,) took one of his compositions to Benjamin Franklin to have it printed and published in his paper. Franklin, having looked over the manuscript, observed that it was deficient in arrangement. "No matter," replied the author, "print any part thou pleasest first." Many are the speeches, and the sermons, and the treatises, and the poems, and the volumes which are like Benjamin Lay's book,—the head must serve for the tail, and the tail for the body, and the body for the head, either end for the middle, and the middle for either end; nay, if you can turn them inside out like a glove, they would be no worse for the operation. When the excellent Hooker was on his death bed, he expressed his joy at the prospect of entering a world of order.

Peter the Great.—Timond, one of his ablest surgeons, and to whom he was much attached, having died, his widow married a young barber from Dantzick who was somewhat more expert in gallantry than in surgery. As he became more wealthy by this marriage, he made a great figure at Moscow. Being one day sent for by the Czar, he went to court in a magnificent dress, and in one of his most elegant carriages. Peter examined him roughly; told him he was a blockhead; and immediately called a troop of valets and peasants whom he ordered him instantly to shave. The gentleman barber was under the necessity of obeying, to the great amusement of the whole court, and then permitted to return with the same parade in which he arrived.

A poor fellow having with difficulty procured an audience of the late Duke of Newcastle, he told his grace he came to solicit him for somewhat towards a support, as they were of the same family, being both descendants from Adam, he hoped he should not be refused. Surely not, said the Duke, surely not—there is a penny for you, and if all the rest of your relations will give you as much, you'll be a richer man than I am.
